NEW QUESTION: 1

A hospital needs an upgrade to 802.11ac for its wireless network. The wireless network supports:
wireless medical devices

medical staff voice communicators

laptops in nurse stations

medical staff tablets

visitor and patient personal devices

All of these devices support both the 2.4GHz and 5GHz band. Assuming about a max throughput of 150 Mbps per AP, the hospital would like to support about 4 Mbps per client. The architect has used VisualRF to plan the AP placement on one of the floors, which the hospital expects will need to support about 800 wireless devices. The exhibits show heatmaps from this plan. The architect also plans to deploy APs in stairwells between floors.

How well does the plan meet the requirements?

- A. The current AP placement meets coverage requirements, but does not meet capacity requirements.
- B. The current AP placement fails to account for the lead-lined walls that are common in patient and exam rooms.
- C. The current AP placement meets the customer requirements in terms of coverage and capacity.
- D. The current AP placement fails to provide adequate signal for the voice communicators in several areas.

Answer: C
