Which of the following types of employee rating systems usually results in rating employees along a bell curve?

- A. Forced distribution
- B. Ranking
- C. Paired comparison
- D. Nominal scale

Answer: A

Explanation:

Explanation: A forced distribution usually results in rating employees along a bell curve. In a paired comparison, each employee's performance viewed in the context of another employee's performance. A ranking system is usually better for a smaller group of employees but can be difficult to organize with a larger group. A nominal scale is not recognized as a type of employee rating system.
