NEW QUESTION: 4

In a project that is feature-rich but time-poor, which is the most reasonable approach to risk analysis?

- A. Use a lightweight approach and assign relative importance of each identified item
- B. Skip the risk analysis step and proceed to test execution based on experience
- C. Concentrate on the functional capabilities and disregard the physical capabilities of the device since those should be tested by the manufacturer
- D. Conduct a full risk analysis, including weighted likelihood and impact ratings for each item

Answer: A

Explanation:

Explanation

B is correct since this is a time-challenged project. If there were adequate time, A might be the right answer, depending on the criticality of the product. C is never a good idea since even minimal risk analysis is needed to focus the testing. D is risky because the interaction of the application with the physical capabilities of the device still need to be tested.
