- least. So what action should you perform to achieve this goal?

  - B. You should configure a management data warehouse process on each instance, then use this process to store and delete performance data in a single database for all instances.
  - C. You should create a SQL Agent job process on each instance to store and delete performance data in a single database for all instances.
  - D. You should create and schedule a single Microsoft SQL Service Integration Services (SSIS) package process, then use this process to store and delete performance data in a single database for all instances.

Answer: B

Explanation:

The data collector is a component installed on a SQL Server server, running all the time or on a userdefined schedule, and collecting different sets of data. The data collector then stores the collected data in a relational database (solve point 2) known as the management data warehouse. The data collector is a core component of the data collection platform for SQL Server 2008 and the tools that are provided by SQL Server. The data collector provides one central point for data collection across your database servers and applications. (solve point 4) This collection point can obtain data from a variety of sources and is not limited solely to performance data (solve point 1), unlike SQL Trace. The data collector enables you to adjust the scope of data collection to suit your test and production environments. The data collector also uses a data warehouse, a relational database that enables you to manage the data you collect by setting different retention periods for your data (solve point 3).

The data collector supports dynamic tuning for data collection and is extensible through its API.
